

Cultural War

The identity, historical cultural heritage, and even life as free individuals itself, will be taken from white Christians if their leftist racist enemies are not defeated in cultural war.

Internet Companies Help Chinese Communists Repress Their People

Executives of America's leading Internet companies looked decidedly uncomfortable and sounded almost pathetic as they faced a well-deserved grilling from congressmen and human rights activists. The interrogators and witnesses wanted the titans of hi-tech wizardry to explain their justification for helping Communist China's cyber police censor the Internet, block access to websites disapproved of by the regime, and track down "cybercriminals" who visited "subversive" sites or expressed views at odds with the Communist Party line. In other words, America's leading internet companies helped communist China close down the last hope of those enslaved Chinese millions who are striving for freedom.

Republicans and Democrats on the House International Relations Subcommittee on Human Rights took turns lambasting representatives from Yahoo!, Google, Cisco Systems, and Microsoft during a seven-hour hearing recently that was carried on the C-SPAN television channel. Yahoo! has come under fire in recent months following revelations that the company provided the communist police agencies information that led to the convictions of Yahoo! e-mail users Li Zhi and Shi Tao, both of whom are Chinese journalists and anti-communists. As a result, Li Zhi is serving an eight-year prison sentence and Shi Tao was given a ten-year sentence. The fact that an American company assisted a tyrannical communist regime's repression is reprehensible.

Google has caved in to the Communist Chinese leadership and set up a special search engine for China's Internet users (Google.cn) that filters out websites and search terms (such as "democracy," "human rights," or "Tiananmen massacre") that the communists have forbidden. Microsoft has taken down a blog from its MSN network because Chinese officials disapproved of its critical political content. Cisco Systems has provided the People's Republic of China with hardware specifically designed to assist China's cyberpolice in conducting surveillance of electronic communications. The international human rights group Reporters Without Borders says it suspects that Cisco Systems has also trained Chinese engineers in the use of its products to more efficiently censor and police the Internet.

Rep. Tom Lantos, the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee, repeatedly asked if they "are proud or ashamed" of their business decisions to aid communist authorities in suppressing freedom in China. "Your abhorrent activities in China are a disgrace. I simply do not understand how your corporate leadership sleeps at night," said Rep. Lantos. "These companies tell us that they will change China, but China has already changed them (into lackeys and servo-mechanisms of communist tyranny)."

Google and the Leftist CIA

An ex-CIA agent has gone further than ever before in detailing Google's relationship with the Central Intelligence Agency, claiming sources told him that CIA seed money helped get the company off the ground and naming for the first time Google's CIA point man. Robert David Steele, a 20-year Marine Corps infantry and intelligence officer and a former clandestine services case officer with the Central Intelligence Agency, is the CEO of www.OSS.net. Speaking to the Alex Jones Show, Steele elaborated on his previous revelations by making it known that the CIA helped bankroll Google at its very inception.

"I think Google took money from the CIA when it was poor and it was starting up and unfortunately our system right now floods money into spying and other illegal and largely unethical activities, and it doesn't fund what I call the open source world," said Steele, citing "trusted individuals" as his sources for the claim. "They've been together for quite a while," added Steele.

Asked to impart to what level Google is "in bed" with the CIA, Steele described the bond as a "small but significant relationship," adding, "it is by no means dominating Google in fact Google has been embarrassed because everything the CIA asked it to do they couldn't do."

"I also think it's very very wrong of Google to have this relationship," cautioned Steele. The former agent went further than before in identifying by name Google's liaison at the CIA. "Let me say very explicitly - their contact at the CIA is named Dr. Rick Steinheiser, he's in the Office of Research and Development," said Steele.

Breaker McCoy

(The Traitorous Media Part II Next Month)