

Cultural War

The identity, historical cultural heritage, and even life as free individuals itself, will be taken from white Christians if their leftist racist enemies are not defeated in cultural war.

Barak Hussein Obama: Psychopath

The media or press has continuously pimped Obama as the greatest orator ever seen. His verbal presentations have been called, "as exciting as Springsteen concerts," by Marxist journalists. Yet even children notice no such orator power emanating from Obama. He talks like a boring negro preacher. He uses that black preacher rhythm which the media calls "hypnotic" but objective people refer to as sing-song, boringly crude and phony.

He stumbles over his rehearsed presentation as sane viewers look incredulously at the cheering section of drooling white people behind him. They are made up to look like working people but it is obvious that they have been recruited from the ranks of Marxist academia. Their faces continually reflect worshipful awe and reverence for the below average black man they call "The One." Do you trust people who are so crazy about a man who is involved with Marxist terrorists, plans to re-distribute working men's wages to the rich and blacks, and oozes with deceit and evil?

If you listen to the rhythmic tone of Obama's zombie-like presentation, you will realize that his emotions are only caricatures of reality, choreographed inside the hundred-year-old black preacher sing-song presentation scheme that he favors. The objective of the preacher sing-song presentation is not to deliver facts and explain issues, or even to outline solutions to problems; but it is designed to demand compliance from the audience. The assumption behind that demand for compliance is that those who refuse will burn in hell forever. When Obama adopts that communication system for his self-serving proselytizing he is telegraphing to the audience several barely concealed feelings of contempt towards that audience. He is contemptuously telling them that they must follow, without thinking, as the faithful should. At the same time, he is delivering an unspoken symbolic Messiah-type threat. As his voice rises and falls according to the preacher sing-song scheme, he is merely cueing the audience in their repeated expressions of awe and servitude rather than asking them to make a decision about whether or not he should be elected president.

If he doesn't have use of his teleprompter, he cannot praise himself because what he says is not heartfelt. He is of such a low intellect that he has not even internalized his own self-praise. Make no mistake about it; Obama does not talk about issues, because his knowledge of issues is shallower than that of a high school sophomore. Obama's presentations are about himself.

If you have been watching Obama speaking and being interviewed, you may have noticed that he seems to revel in the spotlight more than even the most egotistical of political candidates. He spends a half hour going through the crowd after he is introduced, shaking hands like a Messiah. He has a condescending look down his nose, sometimes sneers when he talks to interviewers, and looks especially perturbed and angry when berating someone who he perceives is attacking him. He denies key information about himself that all other candidates are required to offer. The press acquiesces in that secrecy like Obama is "the anointed one." He morphs his voice and body language to suit each audience in a manner that goes beyond customization, to red flag indications that he is acting a part. He is narcissistic, but why?

Obama is driven by Narcissistic Personality Disorder (NPD). Voters must recognize the most accurate indicators of NPD (Narcissistic Personality Disorder).

- An amorphous expression that looks like a child, about three years old, needing approval. You will almost never see this expression in someone who isn't NPD (occasionally in Borderline Personality Disorder, a closely related type II personality disorder). It's an exceptionally good indicator. It's often a fleeting micro-expression (hard to catch without practice). It's an expression of yearning and need, directed toward the person they're interacting with. In males, it makes the face look like that of a little boy. Some psychologists argue that a developmental stage goes awry in NPD, roughly around the age of three.

- The eyes of NPDs usually have an unusual look. They can be described as “dead eyes”, they have “no boundary between inside and outside”. Some people perceive them as magnetic. There's reduced activity in some of the musculature around the eyes. This includes a reduced response to emotion-laden scenes or speech (e.g. less of a startle response to disturbing visuals). At times, it can produce a “detached” appearance - or a languid, even slightly sleepy look. The startle response of pupils (e.g. to disturbing scenes) is often diminished relative to normal people (both less of a change in pupil diameter, and a longer lag before pupil size changes). People with NPD may also spend less time playing through internal imagery (visible in eye tracking and facial expressions).
- There's also something called “frozen cheeks”. Muscles in the cheek region aren't as mobile as in normal people. This is partly due to a subtle expression of contempt, and partly due to increased control over appearance. The contempt can often be an open clear-cut expression, but much of the time it's just a subtle tensing of the musculature, underlying the “apparent” expression.
- Obama displays all of these (the first as micro expressions). There's also his entitlement body language, his glares, his cocked head and “looking down the nose”, etc.. He occupies quite a bit of space, and also frequently initiates physical contact - e.g. putting his hand on someone's back or arm. An assured smooth gesture - in a way that's slightly unusual given our culture's definition of personal boundaries.

- The anger in his face is interesting. Sometimes it's blatant, but more often it's a subtle expression. When Hillary or McCain scored a solid point in a debate, or when a journalist (or even Joe the Plumber) challenges him in a question, you can see a sustained increase in the subtle expression of anger.

People with NPD often have a high level of latent anger that can be triggered by any injury to self-image (narcissistic injury). They can stand angrily by while people are murdered and their homes burned, and their only reaction is to preach: "It is the wrath of Godddd!" Such behavior is psychopathic.

People with NPD are typically hypercompetitive and hate losing. An NPD person would throw a checkerboard across the room if he/she lost a game of checkers. Obama is clearly hypercompetitive and is known as a bad loser - people that he has played poker with comment on him being a poor loser, and he's said to be a bad loser in politics as well (e.g. when he lost to Bobby Rush).

Narcissists are generally charming and are frequently liked (except by those they've injured). However, there is no evidence that Obama is liked. His adoring crowds mean nothing! Adoring crowds have appeared to honor the most evil men in the world, since the persona presented to the crowd frequently has nothing to do with the real person. A person like Obama that refuses to answer the personal questions required of all candidates, and is supported by a leftist press that ferrets out the most microscopic failing of Republicans, cannot be viewed with anything less than suspicion. The narcissist often set up a cult of personality, though on a much smaller scale than Obama - a circle of admiring people. There's a need for a high level of admiration.

Obama's Well Staged Electoral Rallies Afford Insight Into His Psyche

Paul Street, a progressive columnist, had the following observations after attending an Obama rally in Iowa:

"So why wasn't I dancing and singing along? Why did I have a terrible taste in my mouth two hours after Obama's speech even as the sun shone and the warm spring breeze passed through my den just a mile east of the Pentacrest? Part of it was the narcissism of the self-presentation. Obama does this creepy thing after being introduced. He approaches the stage only after a good 5 minutes of passing through a parting sea of applauding audience members. Please. Candidates should stand humbly by the side of the stage and walk up right after being introduced. I do not attend political rallies to see a pretend savior savoring popular adulation as he dances through the cool stream of the multitude.”

The Psychopath

Though people with NPD often cultivate a circle of admirers, they tend to have few true friends. There’s often an odd hint of “aloneness” to them. Obama is “chameleon”-like, deceitful and exhibits many of the characteristics of a psychopath. According to Sorokin and Lundeen the Democrat ruling group's moral behavior, "...tends to be more criminal than that of the ruled population...the lack of morals and apparent lack of guilt characteristic of psychopaths can be found to exist among persons of power and influence..." The influential, everywhere, share a common elitist bond. They manipulate the masses for personal gain, self-esteem enhancement, and the satisfaction derived from destroying or dominating others.

According to Harvey Cleckley, psychopaths are difficult to detect: "...There is nothing odd or queer about him, and in every respect he tends to embody the concept of a well-adjusted, happy person...She/He looks like the real thing...More than the average person, he/she is likely to seem free from the minor distortions, peculiarities, and awkwardness so common even among the successful...Everything about him/her is likely to suggest desirable and superior human qualities, a robust mental health..." A man such as Obama, who telegraphs his psychopathology in many ways, is what the psychiatrists call a transparent psychopath.

It is only possible to identify psychopaths by their behavior over time. That behavior also reveals underlying psychopathic attitudes. Clinicians have identified, "...the core of psychopathy: an inability to develop warm, genuine relationships with others, a lack of empathy, and a callous disregard for the rights and feelings of others..."

The 12 Characteristics Applicable To Soviet Deception
From Cleckley's 16 Psychopathic Characteristics

1. Superficial charm and good intelligence.
2. Absence of delusions and other signs of irrational thinking.
3. Absence of "nervousness" or other psychoneurotic manifestations.
5. Untruthfulness and insincerity.
6. Lack of remorse or shame.
7. Inadequately motivated antisocial behavior.
9. Pathologic eccentricity and incapacity for love.
10. General poverty in major affective reactions.
12. Unresponsiveness in general interpersonal relationships.
13. Fantastic and uninviting behavior with drink and sometimes without.
14. Suicide rarely carried out.
15. Sex life impersonal, trivial and poorly integrated.

Hussein Obama also exhibits sociopathic behavior. "...The sociopath is said to be: a con-man, manipulative, a facile and convincing liar, selfish, callous, charming, disarmingly capable of understanding others and their motives...a blamer of others rather than oneself...unaccepting of ordinary social norms with respect to...agreements and social contracts, incapable of significant...enduring attachment of warmth and responsibility to others..."

Breaker McCoy